

Ginny Brooks Gets Main Street Honor

The Reidsville City Council recognized Ginny Brooks as the City's 2018 Main Street Champion on Tuesday, April 9, 2019 at Reidsville City Hall.

Council wanted to congratulate Brooks publicly after she received the award during the North Carolina Main Street Conference held in Hickory in March.

During the recognition, Mayor Donecker noted several activities that had been included in Brooks' nomination for the award. The actual nomination, which was limited to 150 words, follows:

- “Ginny Brooks joined the Reidsville Downtown Corporation board in the late 1990s and served off and on until 2016. Ginny was pivotal in the development of Market Square, the creation of “Mural Park,” and monthly classic car cruise-ins.
- She also helped create “Kelly’s Way,” an alleyway that was converted into a pocket park named after former City Manager Kelly Almond. “Kelly’s Way” is a popular area for people to socialize, eat lunch, and enjoy the beautiful fountain.
- She led efforts to bring The Rockingham Community College Center for Creative Woodworking to downtown Reidsville in a city-owned building.
- Ginny served two terms as president of the RDC and was a leader and visionary in the truest sense. She challenged fellow board members to find solutions to situations and to always remain positive and look toward the future.
- Ginny never missed an opportunity to volunteer and always led by example. Ginny Brooks is a True Main Street Champion!”
